WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA:

A series of wet weather systems will move through the Northern California during the 7-Day period. The first will begin today as a front sets up over far Northwest California with moderate rain. The front and light rain will spread to a Susanville-Chico-Santa Rosa line by early Thursday, with heavier rain continuing in far Northwest California. The light rain will reach about as far south as I-80 by late Thursday. The front and the rain will pull back to the north on Friday and allow a brief period of warming and drying, but the low and front will move back into the region Friday night and Saturday, exiting by Sunday morning. After high pressure provides another break Sunday and Monday, another low pressure system will move through the region with light to moderate rain Tuesday and Wednesday. The total rainfall during the 7-Day period will be 3-7 inches in the coastal mountains from Lake County northward, 1-2 inches elsewhere over the higher terrain, 0.50-1.00 inches in the lower elevations in the north and west, and 0.10-0.50 inches in far eastern and southern areas. Snow levels with each system will drop from about 7000 feet to 5000 feet as the low pressure moves through.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

A weak ridge of high pressure will build over the area today, bringing partly to mostly sunny and warmer weather to the region through Friday. Temperatures today will climb well into the 80's across the inland valleys with 70's common along the coast and in the mountains below 7,000 feet. By Thursday and Friday, some inland locations of Southern California will see highs near 90. Winds will be light over most areas, but northwesterly winds of 15-25 mph with gusts to 35 mph will continue in Northern Los Angeles County near the I-5 Corridor. Minimum relative humidity will fall into the 15-20% range away from the coast for 3-5 hours Thursday and Friday afternoon. Much cooler weather can be expected for the weekend as a cold storm system passes through the northern part of the state. Temperatures will fall to below normal readings Saturday and Sunday over most areas. Widespread rain can be expected over the northern half of the state. Most of the precipitation will remain to our north, but areas from San Luis Obispo and Fresno County northward may see some precipitation during the day Saturday. The heaviest rain will likely occur over Monterey County and the Sierras from Yosemite National Park northward, where over a half inch of rain will be possible. It will turn very windy in and near the deserts during the afternoon hours this weekend. Next week, high pressure may rebuild over the area, leading to drier and warmer weather. Weak offshore flow may occur next Monday before another storm impacts the northern part of the state during the middle of next week.
